

American Quality Manufacturing Standards (AQMS) To Replace ISO's Foreign Standards

AMCA's pro-American quality standards recognized as an the country's patriotic alternative to ISO 9000 and its series of standards

HOUSTON, TEXAS, USA, September 9, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- AMCA, an independent developer of quality standards for the U.S. manufacturing sector is turning heads nationwide and abroad. According to Michael Baretti, an AMCA spokesman in Houston, the company can barely keep up with demand for its American Quality Certification as a replacement to foreign standards developed by the International Organization of Standardization (ISO).

AMCA, founded in Boston, the birthplace of American War of Independence, is on a mission to liberate U.S. manufacturers from all foreign over-sight related to quality management certification. Baretti said AMCA is boldly taking a pro-American stance to quality certification, challenging what he alleges to be a 'New World Order' disguised as 'global standards' to gain control over American commerce, specifically in manufacturing.

AMCA founder Don LaBelle said quality standards are best utilized when customized for a specific industry, company and market. "Cookie-cutter Global standards mostly harm a manufacturer's innovation, quantum leap growth, and its willingness to challenge the status quo of its industry," said LaBelle. He concluded, "AMCA's pro-American standards was developed to certify manufacturers meeting quality guidelines and requirements related to operational efficiency, environmental-friendliness, leadership and performance ratings."
