Industry Definition and Major Segments

Biocatalysis is the use of living (biological) systems or parts of living (biological) systems to accelerate (catalyse) chemical reactions. Natural catalysts, such as enzymes, perform chemical transformations on organic compounds in biocatalytic processes and are called biocatalysts.

On the basis of type, the market can be divided into:

- Hydrolases
- Oxidoreductases
- Transferases
- Others

The industry is segmented based on application into:

- Food and Beverages
- Cleaning Agent
- Biofuel Production
- Agriculture and Feed
- Biopharmaceuticals
- Others

Based on source, the market can be divided into:

- Microorganisms
- Plants
- Animal

Regionally, the industry is segmented into:

- North America
- Europe
- Asia Pacific
- Latin America
- Middle East and Africa

Market Trends

The global demand for biocatalysts is mainly driven by the rising environmental consciousness. Various technological advancements have made it possible to replace traditional chemical catalysts, which release toxic elements into the atmosphere when used, with biocatalysts, which are a more environmentally friendly option. Biocatalysts are gaining popularity in chemical synthesis due to a number of benefits, including easier separation, fewer side reactions, and less use of protecting groups. Biocatalysts are also less energy-intensive than traditional alkaline catalysed methods, allowing for the use of unrefined feedstock in biodiesel production.

Key Market Players

The major players in the market are Novozymes, Du Pont, Codexis Inc., BASF SE, and others. The report covers the market shares, capacities, plant turnarounds, expansions, investments and mergers and acquisitions, among other latest developments of these market players.
