UV tapes refer to under-pressure sensitive tapes that are manufactured by using base polymer, oligomer, a photoinitiator, etc. They aid in coping with direct sunlight and other environmental factors. In addition to this, UV tapes provide a strong adhesive bond to various surfaces, thereby making them an ideal alternative to conventional duct tapes. They can be applied on ceramics, glass, sapphires, plastic workpieces, etc., that experience prolonged exposure to UV light. As such, UV tapes are extensively utilized for protecting the surface of semiconductor wafers during the back grinding process and keeping them along the ring frame during the dicing procedure.
