A malfunctioning garage door also carries the risk of injury and safety concerns. The moving system supports a heavy overhead door and requires proper maintenance to avoid safety mishaps. Unfortunately, the heartbreaking stories of children and pets trapped or injured due to an outdated garage door are not unfamiliar news. Although modern automated systems have significantly reduced these accidents in the last few years, homeowners should ensure annual maintenance and repair of their garage doors to lower the risk. To most people, the garage is the go-to spot for stowing away the family car and several other household necessities. But intruders often have little trouble entering this area. Installing a digital garage door opener can significantly increase the safety of a garage.

Sometimes replacing an outdated or worn-out garage door is the best option to ensure safety, security, and convenience. On average, a garage door can last up to anywhere between 15 to fifty years.
