Top news this week comes from Statistics Canada as they report that investment in building construction continued its upward trend in July. Both the residential and the non-residential sectors showed increases. At the subcomponent level, new construction for Trade and Services and Warehouses contributed the most to the growth - surpassing pre-COVID-19 pandemic levels. Conversely, investment in new office buildings has been on a downward trend as the work-from-home model became more prevalent and the number of unoccupied offices across Canada continued to increase.
