States. According to the team, Halloween haunted attractions in the US take in an average of $500m in gross ticket sales yearly, and that figure is expected to rise considerably in the next few years.

Director of Spooky Kisses Haunts, R.J. Perry says, "We are super excited to be able to film at these haunts, as typically they do not allow cameras or photographs to be taken. Some attractions are particularly sensitive to folks filming and giving away their trade secrets and scares, but we do this in a way that respects the haunts 'trade secrets' and try to bring out the best for the owners, crew and actors when editing."

Host of the show 'Spooky Kisses' says, "I actually am having trouble sleeping at night, not because of the filming, but because these haunts terrify me and there are so many of them we are filming back to back. I know they will do their best to scare me!"

"Currently, our show is positioning its pilot, Haunted Overload, for Amazon Prime release in October," R.J. states. "If all goes well with the final delivery, it will be on the major streaming platform this fall. We have put considerable effort into refining and creating a show that is fun to watch and captures all the excitement and scares of Halloween, with a dash of comedy."
