Seed testing is an integral part of any seed-production program. This is the only way you can determine if your seeds are high-quality and will perform as you expect. Seed testing can be done in several ways, including purity, vigor, and germination. To determine the likelihood of seeds sprouting and growing into healthy plants, germination tests are performed. Purity tests are used to check for other plant material in the seed batch. Vigor tests are used to assess the health and potential for growth of the seeds. Although seed testing can be expensive and time-consuming, it is vital to ensure that your seeds are high quality.
