A go-kart is also known as a go-cart and is often referred to simply as a kart. It's a type open-wheel vehicle. There are many types of go-karts, from small motorless models to powerful racing machines. Go-karts are often associated with backyard fun or amusement parks. However, serious racers can compete at national and international championships. In the early 1900s motors were added to existing sleds and rolling chairs. The first go-karts were constructed. These early go-karts were powered by pavement runners or ice and didn't feature steering wheels. California's Go Kart Manufacturing Company began making motorized karts capable of being driven on dry ground in the 1930s. They featured three wheels and handlebar steering.
