The growing global emphasis on improving building energy efficiency is expected to be a major factor driving coated glass market growth. Since coated glass is widely used in various applications such as facades, windows, and partitions, the building and construction industry is critical to the coated glass market.

Windows made of coated glass allow maximum visible light transmission while reflecting the sun's infrared energy, lowering the building's heating and cooling costs. Rising significance across the globe regarding the utilisation of solar panels as an alternative source of energy is likely to benefit the coated glass market growth in the long term.

The coated glass reflects unwanted UV and IR radiation, making them desirable for automotive applications where reduction in heat loads is critical, thus propelling the demand for coated glass from the automotive industry. Due to the rapid adoption of coated glass in various end-use applications, the coated glass market is rapidly expanding.

Industry Definition and Major Segments

Coated glass is defined as glass that has an outer layer, film, or coating of a mineral, particularly China clay, to provide a very smooth surface to the glass. Glass coatings are applied to control the exposure of the glass surface to vapours, which bind to the glass and form a permanent coating. Coatings also improve reflection, transmission, and absorption properties, and scratch and corrosive resistance. Coating is an essential component of glass production.
