Soda ash, also known as sodium carbonate, is a white, odorless crystalline solid with the chemical formula  $\text{Na}_2\text{CO}_3$ . It belongs to the chlor-alkali family and is found in large natural deposits or extracted from the ashes of plants growing in sodium-rich soils. Commercial soda ash is available in various grades that differ in particle size and shape as well as bulk density. Due to its disinfectant properties, soda ash is used in the production of laundry detergents, stain removers, and all-purpose cleaners. Apart from this, it is also used in petroleum-based products, personal care products, ceramics, and sodium salts.

Note: We are regularly tracking the direct effect of COVID-19 on the market, along with the indirect influence of associated industries. These observations will be integrated into the report.

Soda Ash Market Trends:

Soda ash finds applications in a diverse range of industries, which is driving the market growth. In the detergent industry, it has replaced conventionally used phosphates that were used in the production of detergents and cleaners. As soaps and detergents have a persistent demand all over the world, there is a constant requirement for soda ash. Besides this, soda ash is utilized in the metallurgical processing industry for recycling zinc and aluminum. Moreover, several chemicals like sodium bicarbonate and percarbonate, sodium silicate, and sodium chromate and dichromate are manufactured using soda ash. The growing demand for these chemicals is strengthening the market growth. Furthermore, stringent regulations in North America and Europe have increased the demand for natural soda ash. Additionally, the ability of soda ash to regulate the pH level of water makes it a popular component in water treatment applications. Other factors like the growing global population and increasing per capita incomes have increased construction activities and the sales of automobiles, which, in turn, is propelling the growth of the market.
