The growing demand for natural and organic ingredients, which are seen as a healthier alternative to spices grown with chemical fertilisers, is driving the global organic spices market.

Organic spices are manufactured without the use of pesticides, harmful chemicals, or any other fertiliser, as the name implies. They are widely used as flavouring agents, preservatives, colouring agents, and for their aromatic properties, all of which contribute to the market's growth. These spices are widely used in Asian cuisines such as Thai, Indian, and other Asian cuisines. As a result of the growing popularity of such cuisines around the world, the organic spice market is also expanding.

Industry Definition and Major Segments

Organic spices are grown without the use of pesticides, chemical fertilisers, or sewage sludge, and are processed without the use of ionising radiation or nutritional additives.
