Today Prince Nereides officially stated:

"Today, September 21th, is the International Day of Peace as proclaimed by the United Nations. This day is supposed to strengthen the ideals of peace observing 24 hours of non-violence and cease-fire. On this special day, I moved to Greece for the remittance of the Who is Who International Award 2022 with the aim to promote international dialogue, cooperation, and mediation. I am more than ever aware that the achievement of unity and peace require effective cohesion plans. In 2022, I find it anachronistic that nations still have to resort to military force. International conflicts must be resolved through negotiations. Diplomacy is the key to success. I just landed in Greece, the cradle of Western civilization, where the power of mediation has always been a true medium of conflict resolutions. Under ancient Greek philosophy, it was believed that one could influence others in decision-making by first creating trustworthiness through understanding others and then, only after this trustworthiness is established, making others understand his position. This method of influence consisted of three sequential steps: ethos, pathos, and logos. Ethos is defined as an individual's ethical nature and credibility. Pathos refers to one's empathy, or ability to understand another person and see things from his position. Lastly, logos means one's logic and talent of persuasion and presentation of his ideas. This philosophical approach created and advocated by the ancient Greeks is still very applicable to diplomatic mediation practice today. Being a cultural diplomat, I renew my commitment to promote dialogue and cooperation among the countries even against any global political strategy, economic changes, or wars. I am deeply honored to receive the Who is Who International Award 2022 and I will use my visibility to spread positive messages made of resilience and hope".
