What does it take to become a good leader?

In more than 25 years of experience in trying to decipher the abject formula to solve the leadership puzzle, Maxwell has found aspects that directly influence not only leadership but also the extent of triumph in the leadership journey. These are – Leadership Values & Leadership Skills.

Is a successful leader one who can turn a company's vision into reality, allowing each individual to thrive? And staying true to each core value of the business? Or does it take an ethical leader who follows their moral compass and embraces the shared values of their followers?

In reality, good leadership needs to have both values and the skillset.

These two aspects are dependent on each other and one cannot become a true leader without one of these. A person with good leadership value will not become a great leader without leadership skills. On the other hand, a person with leadership skills will not become a good leader without proper values. So, in essence, both values and skills of leadership feed off each other.

Leadership Values

These form the core upon which leadership is built – the core beliefs and principles that guide us in every aspect of life. These values help determine the type of leader one aspires to become and how they want to achieve their goals. Values play an important role in guiding decision-making and what actions need to be taken.

According to Maxwell, values vary from person-to-person. It can be defined as the things one

Leadership skills help in creating a vision, be it personal or for an organization, set direction and goals, help move people toward a common goal, empower people to reach their full potential and stay motivated. They also help in pushing the horizon and seek innovative ways to achieve success.
