

Inflation & Divorce: Data Shows Rising Rates Are Keeping Couples Married Longer

The Divorce Index™ by Divorce.com Provides Insight into Inflation's Effect on Divorce

BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA, UNITED STATES, September 29, 2022

/EINPresswire.com/ -- Divorce rates are dropping as inflation rates rise. Does that mean rising inflation is increasing marital bliss? Probably not. A recent Insight from Divorce.com that relies on data from its Divorce Index™ indicates that today's economy—with inflation spurring rising costs across the board—is likely driving the divorce rate down.

The Divorce Index™ by Divorce.com indicates that inflation is driving divorce rates down.

"We analyzed how the recent spike in inflation affected divorce interest, leaning on data from our Divorce Index," said Chief of Divorce Evolution Laura Wasser, who is known for her acclaim as a divorce lawyer-to-the-stars but who has also dedicated the last decade-plus of her life to

There's a big difference between correlation and causation, but our data begs the question: Is the economy keeping people from divorcing? If so, it's important that we offer ways to ease that burden" helping real people divorce faster and with less cost, conflict, and uncertainty. "When money gets tight, even listless relationships are less likely to end," said Wasser. "Bottom line? Many Americans simply can't afford to call it quits."

THE DIVORCE INDEX™—KEY TAKEAWAY

The team from Divorce.com assists more couples filing for divorce in the United States than anyone else, and its online system launched the online divorce industry. Our Divorce Index™ draws on decades of proprietary information to measure a broad spectrum of divorce-related data, including Americans' interest in seeking marriage dissolution across time and geography. Research across our systems indicates that rising inflation is driving the divorce rate down.
