An adult diaper is a disposable garment worn by individuals to prevent leaks due to medical conditions, such as mobility impairment, dementia, diarrhea, and urinary and fecal incontinence. Pad, flat and pants are some commonly available variants of adult diapers. They are manufactured using polyacrylate granules and polythene films and consist of super absorbent layers that can retain large liquid volumes. The core lining of the product contains cellulose fluff pulp that aids in odor eradication, leakage protection and absorption of fluids. In comparison to baby diapers, adult diapers are available in various sizes, are comfortable and convenient to wear and have higher absorbing capacities.
