COLCHESTER, ESSEX, UNITED KINGDOM, September 26, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Colchester-based health and social care organisation, Provide Community, has been announced as a finalist in two of this year's prestigious Business Culture Awards categories for Business Culture Leadership and the Best Non-Profit Organisation.

With tough competition from a host of British and global brands, Provide Community has been named as a double finalist in an awards event that celebrates people and businesses who lead the way in setting up their employees for success by creating a productive and collaborative culture in the workplace.

The Community Interest Company, which delivers health and social care services to communities in the Eastern region, has been shortlisted for the Best Non-Profit Organisation for Business Culture award. Judges will be looking closely at how Provide Community has invested in its workplace culture and community impact.

As an employee-owned organisation, Provide invites all of its members to voice and influence how the company is run and reinvests profits into services, innovation, and the communities it serves. This played a major role in Provide Community's entry, which detailed the trebling of its community grants in 2022 to £374,646 in support of charitable organisations, with more than £3.5 million donated in the last 11 years.

“

Culture Leadership award, which recognises professionals whose passion and commitment to creating a positive workplace has made a noticeable difference to staff and stakeholders.

Mark Heasman, Group CEO

Commenting on the nominations, Mark said; "Provide Community is an organisation fuelled by its culture and core values of care, innovation, and compassion. It is fantastic to see the hard work and passion of all Provide colleagues recognised in such a prestigious award.

Mark continues, "Personally, I am proud to lead such an outstanding organisation that has culture at its heart and I am humbled to have been nominated."

Business Culture Awards winners are set to be announced at a gala dinner event in London on Wednesday 5th October, which will be hosted by the writer and radio presenter Reverend Richard Coles.
