Rise in geriatric population prone to aortic stenosis, technological advancements in transcatheter aortic valves, and increased adoption rate of TAVI procedure are some of the major factors that drive the TAVI market. However, stringent regulatory norms of the government hamper the market growth. Currently, transfemoral implantation segment occupies the largest share in the global TAVI market, followed by subclavian implantation. Europe is expected to dominate the global TAVI market during the forecast period, followed by North America.
