Hair pieces, wigs and hair extensions are artificial hair integrations that are used by men and women to either attain a certain hair style or cover up balding or partial bald patches caused by hair loss. The purpose of hair extension is to alter the hairstyle instantly and add length and volume to natural hair by clipping, gluing, or sewing on natural hair, thus hiding baldness and enhancing the appearance. False hair is primarily sourced from countries such as China, Japan, Korea, Brazil, India, Peru, and Western European countries. The major consumer base of false hair product are the U.S., China and the UK.

The hair piece, wig, and extension market is growing at an exponential rate. This is attributed to the evolving fashion and growing acceptance of female hair piece, wig, and extension market in the UK. Healthy and lush hair is often regarded as an important component in beauty among women. Thus, increase in consciousness among women regarding their looks has boosted the demand for hair pieces, wigs, and extensions. A large population of women suffer from hair loss in the UK. According to the National Health Service (NHS), around 8 million women in the UK suffer from hair loss and often search for ways to fix or mask their condition through wigs, extensions, and transplants. Thus, upsurge in number of women suffering from hair loss has notably boosted the demand for elegant hair accessories in the recent times.

Hair wigs and hair extensions that are frizz-free, smooth, and resembling natural human hair are in high demand. Industries have been investing considerably in the manufacturing and chemical processing of synthetic hair for making it look more natural. However, the significant environmental impact of synthetic wigs and emergence of novel treatment of hair loss such as Minoxidil act as the major challenges for the growth of the market in the UK. Conversely, breakthrough production of false hair is expected to drive the UK female hair piece, wig, and extension market in future.
