EINPresswire.com/ -- IndustryARC, in its latest report, predicts that the Freeze Dried Vegetables Market size is estimated to reach $42.8 billion by 2027, growing at a CAGR of 7.4% during the forecast period 2022-2027. Freeze-drying also known as lyophilization or cryodesiccation is a dehydration process that involves food preservation and then removing the moisture in a vacuum drying chamber. Freeze-dried veggies are gaining popularity among businesses and customers due to the primary benefit of the product's long shelf life. Freeze drying not only extends the shelf life of these items but also ensures that all nutritional elements are preserved. Ready-to-eat soups are made with freeze-dried vegetables such as peas, cauliflower, cabbage, potatoes, carrots, and broccoli. Dried veggies are also sold at a variety of retail outlets around the world for direct consumption. Freeze drying is gaining popularity as it is easier to handle heat-sensitive foods while preserving their flavors and nutritional value. Increased demand for freeze-dried foods to meet nutritional needs among adventure sports and expedition enthusiasts is expected to be a major driver of market growth. The increasing inclination of consumers towards quick, economical, and delightful food products, owing to their fast-paced lives, creating huge growth opportunities for dehydrated vegetable products is set to drive the Freeze Dried Vegetables Market.
