Michael Vartanian began his journey working at a watch shop when he was just 16 years old. He spent nine years at that job and learned all about how to care for watches. He originally had planned to become a pharmacist but didn't feel that it was the right path for him, so he earned a business degree from Cal State LA before starting his own business. After saving up all his money, in 1996 Vartanian opened Marina Bay Watch Company, a watch service center and jewelry repair shop in Marina del Rey. It was a huge challenge the first few years of running the store in his early twenties, but he was fortunate to meet his wife shortly after opening the business. Having the support of his wife and daughter, along with his employees who all happen to be family members, has kept Vartanian focused over the years. His cousin, Moosh

Babadjanian, has worked there for over 15 years and helps manage the business. Vartanian created a special bond with his customers and the people who supported the business when he was starting.
