Market Overview:

Neuroendoscopy is a medical procedure that is done by neurosurgeons using an endoscope on the end to basically allow the neurosurgeon to navigate and access the tumor. Under this procedure, the tumor is removed or taken a sample of it (a biopsy) and then neurosurgeons attach special instruments to the endoscope, often an additional endoscope with forceps and scissors on the end, as opposed to conventional open brain surgery, which requires more time for healing post-surgery and induces less pain.

The increasing demand for minimally invasive surgical procedures, growing geriatric population coupled with favorable reimbursement policies are the significant factors responsible for driving the growth of the neuroendoscopy market in the above-mentioned forecast period. Additionally, the favorable government initiatives, rising prevalence of neurological disorders, and benefits of neuroendoscopic surgery over conventional brain surgery also heighten the overall growth of the market. However, the factors such as high cost included in neuroendoscopy procedures and equipment obstruct the market's growth.

The benefits of neuroendoscopic surgeries over conventional brain surgery and advancement of technology in neuroendoscopy are expected to generate profitable opportunities for the market. On the other hand, the downward pricing pressure owing to its commodity nature have the potential to challenge for the market's growth.
