Intrigue, aliens, and even a zombie penguin—readers will get to make choices where the story goes and navigate STEM themes of climate change, space exploration, and the biology of extreme organisms.”

Lily Simonson

Simonson draws on her experience living at a scientific research station in Antarctica, bringing the stark continent to life in this new interactive adventure. Readers ages 9-12 will navigate adventures filled with treachery, intrigue, aliens, and even zombie penguins.

As a National Science Foundation Antarctic Artists and Writers Program Awardee, Simonson spent three months making art while scuba diving beneath the world's largest expanse of sea ice. She has also been the artist-in-residence aboard numerous deep-sea expeditions. Her first book of children's fiction is woven with STEM themes of climate change, space exploration, and the unique biology of extreme organisms.

Chooseco will host the first book launch in history live from Antarctica in mid-October. For more information about how to participate with your classroom please visit Chooseco's website.

Antarctica! is available this fall (publishing October 4, 2022) wherever great literature for children is sold.
