Key Trends In The Sorghum Seed Market

Collaborations and partnerships have emerged as a key trend gaining popularity in the sorghum seed market. Major companies operating in the sorghum seed sector are focused on collaborations and partnerships to meet consumer demand and strengthen their position. For instance, in October 2019, National Sorghum Producers, a US-based organization for improving the sorghum industry, partnered with the United States Department of Agriculture, the federal executive department responsible for developing and executing federal laws related to farming, and forestry in the US. The goal of this collaboration is to quantify sorghum sustainability in a key ethanol-producing region. Furthermore, in September 2019, Monsanto, a US-based agrochemical and agricultural biotechnology corporation merged with Bayer CropScience Limited for an undisclosed amount. This merger brought two complimentary firms together, resulting in the creation of an innovative engine for Indian agriculture. Bayer CropScience Limited is a Germany-based company that offers sorghum seeds.

Overview Of The Sorghum Seed Market

The sorghum seed market consists of sales of sorghum seeds by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that refer to a type of corn that is grown in warm countries. Its grain is often made into flour or syrup. Sorghum is called a grain millet, Indian millet, milo, durra, cereal grain plant, and they are related to the grass family. It is a crucial grain and forages crop because of its high flexibility and suitability for rain-fed low-input agriculture.
