Security Beyond Compliance

Tim Sutton, Senior Security Consultant and Cannabis Security Practice Leader – Guidepost Solutions

A security plan utilizing the minimum technology and operational procedures as required for compliance with the regulations should not be mistaken as a security plan designed to protect the people and property within your facility. No single state's security requirements meet the physical protection standards utilized by every other type of business. Most states' requirements include antiquated and misunderstood elements for security compliance or fail to address many areas entirely. Tim Sutton is considered the most qualified cannabis security expert in consulting. With nearly 35 years of security management experience across several industries including boots-on-the-ground experience within the cannabis industry as security director for two MSOs and triple board certification, he has been the cannabis industry's go to security consultant and SME since 2013. Attendees of this session will learn the differences between security plans for compliance and security plans that will mitigate against the risks the industry faces.
