Unsaturated polyester resin (UPR) is a composite material consisting of glass-fiber reinforced plastics and a matrix incorporated with resins. It offers high tensile binding and impact strength along with an enhanced ability to withstand heat and corrosion. Unsaturated polyester resins are prominently used to manufacture composite materials, wood paints, laminated panels, coatings, coloring pastes, and sanitary wares.

Market Trends:

The expanding construction sector and the growing number of infrastructural projects are primarily augmenting the market for UPR. Moreover, the rising demand for high tensile and lightweight materials for manufacturing automotive parts with better fuel efficiency is also proliferating the market growth. Additionally, the increasing application of unsaturated polyester resins as a raw material for producing tanks, pipes, sports equipment, ducts, etc., is further augmenting the product demand. In the coming years, the growing adoption of UPR in electronic equipment, such as substation devices, printed wiring boards, microwaves, etc., will continue to propel the global market.
