Impact of COVID-19 on the Global Underfloor Heating Market:

As a result of the COVID-19 epidemic, the global market for underfloor heating has grown dramatically. Because of the disruption caused by the new coronavirus and home quarantines, component suppliers and manufacturers were forced to reconsider how they could use the global distribution network to ensure business continuity. The industry's players faced operational difficulties and labor shortages as a result of the implementation of safety measures to stop the virus's spread. Furthermore, the new coronavirus epidemic caused the closure of offices and other business enterprises, which changed the cost and demand for underfloor heating systems. Demand decreased as a result of manufacturers, service providers, and contractors being either prohibited or hesitant to provide installation services due to social distance.
