Market Summary: -

Diabetic mastopathy is a disorder in which a benign tumor, such as a breast lump, develops in women who have had type 1 or type 2 insulin-dependent diabetes for a long time. Men have also been diagnosed with the disease. Lymphocytic mastitis is a similar disease affecting non-diabetics. Although surgical excision was once the standard for excluding malignancy, core biopsy is now considered sufficient for this disease diagnosis. A fine needle aspiration (FNA) is rarely performed since it does not give enough cellular material for adequate examination and is technically challenging due to the firmness of the lesions. The rate of reappearance of lesions after surgical removal is around 32%, and it usually happens within 5 years.

Diabetic mastopathy is a rare fibroinflammatory breast lesion that occurs in premenopausal women who have had type 1 diabetes for a long time and have many microvascular problems. An immunological reaction to the accumulation of aberrant matrix caused by hyperglycemia is thought to be involved in the development of this disease. The formation of thick keloidlike breast masses that are commonly recurring, bilateral, or both are among the clinicopathologic features. It might be difficult to tell the difference between a benign condition and a cancer on the basis of clinical evidence.
