Key Trends In The Recycled Polyethylene Terephthalate Market

According to the recycled polyethylene terephthalate market overview, technology advancement activities are a key trend gaining popularity in the market, such as PET, XTREME Renew process, etc. Innovative recycling and recovery techniques and technologies have enormous economic value in transforming post-use and difficult-to-recycle plastic. They can be converted into their original building blocks that can be continually reintegrated to supply chains as feedstocks for new plastics and chemicals, other raw materials for manufacturing, and lower-environmental-footprint transportation fuels. Advanced recycling can handle impurities, contamination, mixed polymers, and low-quality, low-density plastics. Other than these printing waste manufacturers also utilize PET waste from other streams for this purpose, thus lowering material costs. In 2021, LiquiGlide technology was adopted that removes friction, allowing thick, slow-moving liquids to flow more easily. This was used by Colgate's new clear PET toothpaste container.

Overview Of The Recycled Polyethylene Terephthalate Market

The recycled polyethylene terephthalate market consists of sales of recycled polyethylene terephthalate by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that manufacture recycled polyethylene terephthalate. Polyethylene terephthalate (PET) is a recyclable plastic resin. It is actually a polyester, created by the mixture of two monomers, namely, modified ethylene glycol and purified terephthalic acid. PET is often recycled into new PET containers, carpet, clothing, protective packaging, industrial strapping, automotive parts, construction materials, tennis balls, and tennis ball canisters.
