Surgical masks are extensively used for providing appropriate protection against pathogens in the operative and procedural settings, owing to their ability to create barriers either from the structure of the nonwoven fabric itself or from an additional active coating for personal protective apparel. These masks are sterile, antibacterial, liquid repellent, and liquid absorbent. They are commonly used in surgical procedures, serving as a barrier to microbes and prevent cross-contamination. The India surgical masks was valued at $71.73 million in 2019, and is expected to reach $157.13 million by 2027 at a CAGR of 10.3% during the forecast period.
