the size of the space and seeing so many other artists working together. But once we got started, it was an incredible experience.”

Further sharing that the connection between the two artists was instant, as they bonded over the love of abstract art. Stating that their approach to creating art was also very similar and they had great synergy working together.

“We both tend to work in our own zone for hours at a time before taking a break to examine our progress. The best part of our partnership was working side by side and being able to get Paul's critique on my artistic process” Parker said.

Parker Heath, whose California upbringing has infused his life and art in a myriad of ways. From desert to coastal landscapes - and while traveling the world as a professional BMX rider, he has only helped to expose himself even more to a wide range of artists from around the world.

Parker shares, “This experience has been a dream come true and allowed me to re-explore and re-invent past designs with new ideas. Much of my abstract work involves blending warm neutrals with subtle tones. It also helped me to expand with different color palettes and to add bolder colors with contrasting black and dark grays, for a truly spectacular result that makes each piece stand out even more.”

I can't express how excited I am about the launch of my collection. This commission has helped me to realize my lifelong dream of becoming a professional artist and I can't thank Paul enough.”

Sharing insights on his creative process, Parker says that before he picks up a brush he starts by centering himself, stretching, and moving his body to get warmed up. Then he gathers his original sketches so that he can let inspiration take him away.

“My favorite way to get creative is with my favorite band, Khruangbin, which has a modern psychedelic guitar feel that always puts me in a trance-like groove. Afterwards I listen to my favorite playlists with a mix of classic rock, folk, jazz, house, and some funk & soul thrown in between.”

Before Parker even picks up a brush he starts by gathering his original sketches so that he can let inspiration take him away.

This is the first art commission that Parker has entertained since establishing his brand PAR KER made in 2021 - which focuses on reimaging his original paintings into functional home and living collections.

"I love that my original art is now available for sale through Paul Michael Home. This partnership has helped me to further realize my lifelong dream of becoming a professional artist. I can't thank Paul enough for working with me and sharing my art with his customers."
