A catheter is a small, flexible tube used to treat many medical diseases, including those related to the heart, urology, gastrointestinal tract, and nervous system, among others. Hollow, pliable tubes called urinary catheters are placed into the bladder to drain urine. People who are unable to empty their bladders owing to medical issues spontaneously use catheters. Catheters can remain in place for weeks and come in a variety of materials. Additionally, catheters may be implanted temporarily or permanently into the brain, skin, and ducts.

Drivers

Increasing prevalence of chronic illnesses

Chronic illnesses include cardiovascular, gastrointestinal, urological, and ophthalmic ailments and are on the rise as a result of an ageing population and other environmental variables. The demand for catheters is anticipated to rise during the forecast period due to its use in treating chronic diseases. For instance, cardiac catheterization is carried out to diagnose or treat diseases such as blocked arteries or arrhythmia.

Rise in cardiac disorders

There are various types of cardiac catheters according to the complexity of cardiac problems which increase the efficiency of physicians while performing surgery. The cardiovascular devices industry is growing at a significant rate due to an increase in patients with cardiac disorders and an increase in unhealthy lifestyle. Additionally, during the forecast period, the cardiac catheter market will expand more due to technological advancements.

Rising healthcare infrastructure

The main factors driving market growth are an ageing population and an increase in patients with cardiac disorders, while technological advancements for better treatment and minimally invasive equipment will also spur market growth. Governments are also taking steps to improve the healthcare infrastructure and raise awareness about treatments.
