Hepatitis B Infection Market Overview

Hepatitis B virus, or HBV, can cause a serious infection that affects the liver and causes liver disease such as cirrhosis or liver cancer. These infections cannot be detected at an early stage and become visible only after a few weeks. It is a disease that can occur from birth and is primarily caused by blood transfusions in healthcare settings, dialysis, and razor sharing. The hepatitis B vaccine contains hepatitis B surface antigen (HBsAg) as well as viral envelope proteins. It is also made from yeast cells. The medication course consists of two or three injections spaced two to three months apart. Immune system memory also aids in providing resistance to viruses.

Limited access to hepatitis B treatment and diagnosis in many resource-constrained settings, as well as the rising prevalence of hepatitis B infections, are expected to drive the global hepatitis B therapeutics market during the forecast period. Rising awareness and affordability are two key factors that will increase the rate of diagnosis before a person has advanced liver disease. Furthermore, rising awareness and the development of new types of medications with higher efficacy are expected to provide a good opportunity for the global hepatitis B vaccines market.
