them understand what they believe and why they believe it.

"When COVID-19 hit, the world shut down, including most churches. Governments worldwide, including the US and Canada, began enforcing restrictions on religious liberty within their borders. In California, churches were ordered to close while strip clubs were allowed to remain open. At this moment, I realized that Christians in the US are not prepared for persecution, nor are they prepared to defend what they believe and why they believe it. I began looking for a way I could help remedy this situation. My friend and I decided to start the Rooted in Logos podcast." ~ Bradley Wampler

The name "Rooted in Logos" has a deeper meaning. Bradley and his co-host toyed with many ideas, but ultimately, they wanted something that incorporated the Greek word Logos, translated into "The Word." They thought of the verse in Psalm that says to be like a tree rooted in God. Thus, the name "Rooted in Logos" or "Rooted in The Word" came into being and is a true representation of the concept behind the podcast.

Consistent material is the key strategy that has helped "Rooted in Logos Podcast" grow. Bradley and his co-host make sure that their listeners can count on them. They put out content each week to remain in their listeners' minds and playlists. The other strategy that has helped "Rooted in Logos Podcast" is remaining lighthearted and fun even amid tough and deep topics. All these things have made the podcast reach new heights in July and August of this year with maximum downloads.

"Our show is at its best when we have a conversation. We have reference points, a general idea of where we want the episode to go, and general points we want to get across to our listeners. Ultimately, there is no script and sometimes the conversations lead us down a path that we were not intending to go down. But as long as our listeners are connecting with us, it's good to go!" ~ Bradley Wampler.
