Companies in the surgical sealants and adhesives market are focusing on mergers and acquisitions to expand their product offerings and increase their market share. Top companies in the market are strategically acquiring start-ups and mid-sized companies to increase their profits and curb competition. For instance, Advanced Medical Solutions, a UK-based company, acquired Sealantis for an amount of nearly $25m. The acquisition significantly strengthens the company's product portfolio for internal sealants and fixation devices, sitting alongside AMS's liquiBandFix8, laparoscopic, and liquiBandFix8 open fixation devices. Sealantis is an Israeli-based company that has developed a wide range of surgical indications and holds patents for alga-mimetic sealant technology. Also, in December 2021, BD, a US-based medical technology company that manufactures and sells medical devices, instrument systems, and reagents, acquired Tissuemed, Ltd. for an undisclosed amount. This acquisition complements BD's core portfolio, adding an innovative, broadly applicable surgical sealant to a suite of BD bio-surgery products. Tissuemed Ltd. is a UK-based medical technology company that develops tissue-based therapeutic devices and bioadhesive films used in surgeries.
