“I wanted to create an inspiring and motivational song that uplifts the listeners and adds positivity to their lives,” said Sarantos. “Proceeds from the song will be donated to the American Cancer Society, so they can further conduct research and other efforts to find a cure for cancer.”

He continues, “For this music video, I wanted to make it as real as possible. I feel like social media, movies and TV shows kind of continue to glamorize the people we see on our devices, hiding their imperfections and giving us a false window into their reality. Society still makes people want to be someone we aren’t, someone different, someone else.

But this video shows me as I truly am. Hair not fixed, rolled straight out of bed, no make up, no editing for skin imperfections etc. When you see me behind the fence at that unflattering camera angle, yes it's done on purpose. It symbolizes the fact we're all hiding in plain sight, in a cage. I think it's important to be yourself, always. That's the simple message of this music video. Please don't ever forget that you are enough. Please believe in yourself, because I certainly do!"
