David Savitsky, CEO of ATC Healthcare Services, joined panel at Capital One's 2022 Healthcare Leadership Summit to speak on Healthcare Labor Trends and the Future of Medical Staffing

ATC Healthcare, the national leader in healthcare staffing, participated this past week with Capital One and TripleTree as they brought together top healthcare industry thought leaders to discuss the most important issues and trends shaping the healthcare industry. David Savitsky of ATC Healthcare was one of the esteemed panelists.

It was so interesting to hear the various speakers confirm the tremendous needs that are out there for medical staffing and the great opportunities that are available.”

The panel was meant to give people an update on the current labor shortage, discuss the difficulty that was created by COVID for nurses, what the current supply/demand balance looks like, what has been the impact on wages as well as the future outlook for the labor market outlining what factors could change it.

David Savitsky spoke about the labor situation in medical staffing before, during and post-COVID. He discussed how many nurses have burnt out because of working conditions during COVID. They may have left facilities as full-time employees, but they are happy to work for a staffing company where their hours are flexible and they can dictate when they will work. He commented on the fact that wages are also good for nurses working for staffing agencies. Savitsky elaborated on how hospitals need the partnership of medical staffing agencies and that ATC Healthcare and others continue to play an increasingly important role of ensuring adequate staffing levels at facilities across the country.
