I am very excited to have this opportunity and look forward to my future with Aloha.”

Dalton Thomas

Bellingham, Wash., area. He will help provide customers in Skagit and Whatcom counties the added lifestyle convenience that comes with on-demand laundry, having laundry service through an app.

As market developer, Thomas grows routes and handles drivers/operators’ schedules. He will also team up with Whatcom County laundromats and dry cleaners to expand the app-based laundry pickup/delivery platform.

Thomas said his goal as an Aloha market developer is to “gain independence and start my own company.” For about two years, Thomas was general manager at Brio Laundry, located in Bellingham, Wash., and with which Aloha Laundry Life is partnered. He credited his professional background in clean energy and security industries to preparing him for his current career. He was also employed by Brio Laundry in Bellingham.

“I have been a manager over a solar department and have been a regional manager for a security company,” he said. “Both of these have shown me that with dedication and the correct infrastructure, anyone can be successful.”

By doing wash-and-fold pickup/delivery on behalf of residential and commercial clients, Aloha lifts a load off them, thus freeing up their schedules so they can concentrate on other mandatory tasks and leisure time.

Through the integration of Laundry University and one-on-one coaching during the onboarding process, each market developer becomes laundry proficient enough to independently own a “virtual laundromat.”

Born in Washington State, Thomas has lived across the United States in Wyoming, Delaware, and Louisiana. He had also served a two-year mission in Monterrey, Mexico.

"I love the outdoors. My passion is growing small businesses and working with hungry entrepreneurs," Thomas said.

Learning about the Aloha opportunity from a friend, Thomas went on board with the company on September 15, 2021. He had worked in the gig economy before, but he believes Aloha Laundry Life is the best fit for him as a gig economy company.

"It was exactly what I was looking for!" he said. "I am very excited to have this opportunity and look forward to my future with Aloha."
