Contraception is a way of preventing pregnancy that involves the use of medications or a device. It is sometimes referred to as birth control or fertility control. Contraception devices or medicines interfere with the normal process of sperm-ovum fertilisation in order to prevent pregnancy. The increased emphasis on the importance of family planning and preventing unwanted pregnancy drives market expansion. Furthermore, the increased usage of contraceptives among young women and the rise in higher educational attainment drive market growth. Furthermore, the health risks associated with teenage pregnancies, increased awareness of contemporary contraception, and increased usage of oral pills as a key technique to avoid unplanned pregnancy all contribute to the expansion of the contraceptives market.
