Overview Of The Processed Meat Market

The processed meat market consists of sales of processed meat by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that are preserved by curing, smoking, drying, salting, or canning. Processed meat is defined as any meat that has been altered in order to increase its flavor or prolong its shelf life. Processed meats are cured with sodium nitrite to avoid the growth of the clostridium perfringens and stored in chilling and cold storage during the preservation process. High barrier materials such as polyvinylidene dichloride or ethylene-vinyl alcohol are used for the vacuum packing of processed meat.
