Organic Seafood Market Trends:

The increasing demand for organic seafood products can be attributed to the rising prevalence of several foodborne diseases, including calicivirus, and salmonella, caused by the presence of pathogens in conventionally cultivated seafood items. Moreover, favorable initiatives undertaken by governments to encourage sustainable aquafarming practices owing to the escalating environmental concerns is propelling the market expansion. Apart from this, the growing awareness regarding the benefits associated with the consumption of organic seafood products and the extensive product utilization for manufacturing various consumer goods are supporting the market growth. Looking forward, IMARC Group expects the global organic seafood market to continue its robust growth during the forecast period (2022-2027).
