-- Define What Dating Is To You:

There is not a single, agreed upon definition of dating. And the amount of seriousness and commitment implied with the term "dating" varies, depending on who you ask. Some people use the term loosely, applying it to sex-laden situation ships, casual bone buddies, and FWBs. Others reserve it for dynamics with more intimacy or commitment.

Determine What You Want While Dating:

Questions like "what is my preferred relationship structure?" "What is my relationship orientation?" "What level of commitment, time, and energy am I willing to bring into this dynamic right now?" "What are my current priorities?" should be what you ask yourself because It is helpful to know what you are looking for as you go into dating.

If you want to start dating ASAP, use the free dating apps:

Whether we love them or hate them, if we want to start dating, like, yesterday, the top dating apps are a choice. There are tons of Free Apps for meeting new people. Go to a bar or coffee shop:

Specifically, a bar or coffee shop that you like. Why? Because, odds are, you and the other patrons are attracted to a similar energy, and you may have something in common.

Play the long game by putting yourself in positions to meet potential partners:

The name of the (long) game here is meeting as many people as possible. The more people you meet, the better your chances that you'll be dating soon.

No, these tips do not change if you are not “out.” If you are not “out,” take your time! It is an individual process with individual timelines. There is plenty of room for exploration of how you identify before coming out.
