

Organic Feed Market Size, Share, Status and Forecasts 2020-2027

Increase in demand for organic feed from developing countries due to rise in economy and awareness about organic food for livestock.

PORTLAND, OR, US, October 25, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Organic Feed is food material or fodders for the cattle, goats, poultry, swine, and other livestock that contains certified organic ingredients. Ingredients comprise wheat, barley, soybean, corn, and crops grown without the use of any fertilizers and chemical pesticides, which make the crop organic in nature. Organic feed comes in different varieties such as crumbles, mashes, and pelleted feeds, and is generally demanded by livestock owners who supply organic milk and meat. Organic feeds are in high demand, as it is free from antibiotics, drugs, pesticides, and growth hormones, which help in healthy growth of the animal health and help in improving digestion, enhancing longevity in livestock, and maintains the pH in rumen.

The pandemic has made consumers aware of the benefits of natural & organic products, which has increased the demand for healthy food items and organic food supply.

Manufacturers are facing problems in procuring raw materials as the transport facilities are not available due to shut down and other restrictions.

The demand for organic fodder will increase after the pandemic as consumers will demand more organic food items, which will lead to the demand for organic feed for animals.

Surge in usage in North America and Asia-Pacific

North America has the highest demand for organic foods and meat items, which is increasing the demand for organic feeds. Sales over the past few years have seen surge and demand are increasing considerably. Major reasons for increase in demand are rising contamination of insecticide and pesticide in eggs, milk, and meat, which is rising the demand for nontoxic food without chemical compounds and rise in demand for healthy food are the reasons North America is experiencing a growth in organic feeds.
