A cotton picker is a machine for harvesting cotton. Cotton pickers were invented in the early 1900s. They were widely used by American farmers during the middle of the 20th century. These machines can strip the cotton plant's fruit and remove the seeds in one pass. The manual labor required to harvest cotton has been greatly reduced by cotton pickers. Farmers used to have to pick cotton manually for hours in the past. A cotton picker today can complete the task in half the time. This has enabled farmers to increase their production and make more money.
