LONG BEACH, CA, UNITED STATES, November 1, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Ye, formerly known as Kanye West, is receiving a formal invitation to join Sharifah Hardie on her talk show, "In The Studio" to discuss race relations in America. “

I believe that change starts with a conversation. That is the basis of everything that I do. If we can't talk about it how can we change it?"

In recent weeks, West, also known as Ye, has come under heavy fire for remarks made online and during TV interviews that some viewed as antisemitic. As a result, he was locked out of his Instagram and Twitter accounts, received a lot of backlash, lost partnerships and endorsement deals. Unaired portions of an interview between Ye and Tucker Carlson on Fox News show the American rapper making a number of remarks based on racial conspiracies, adding fuel to the interview's mounting controversy. Ye also sat down on the "Drink Champs" podcast to clarify many of his remarks.

Currently having launched a campaign to raise $1.5 billion to support and maintain the operations of Black businesses, Ms. Hardie isn't someone who just talks about helping her community. She is someone who is making it happen. Recent news articles have picked up speed about Ms Hardie's effort to help this issue including the most recent Face2FaceAfrica article.

Ye is cordially invited to Sharifah Hardie's studio to talk about how critical it is for the entertainment industry to protect emerging talent and address racial issues in the country. There is plenty to be said about America and who better to say it with than this popular entertainer and businessman and present news observer? As such Sharifah Hardie is extending a formal invitation to Kanye "Ye" West to sit down and discuss these topics.
