

AT a CAGR of 2.8% | DeNOx-SCR Catalysts Market Predicted To Augment And Reach Over USD 2.32 billion by 2027

DeNOx-SCR Catalysts Market size is projected to amount to USD 1.90 billion in 2019 and to surpass USD 2.32 billion by 2027, registering a CAGR of 2.8%

NEW YORK CITY, NEW YORK, UNITED STATES, November 2, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The term NOx refers to nitrogen oxides, nitrogen dioxide, and nitric oxide. Major contributors to NOx production are combustion and flue gases. The man-made byproducts of combustion and flue gases are responsible for acid rain as well as global warming and pollution. DeNOx catalysts were developed to remove these compounds from the environment. DeNOx catalysts are created when ammonia is added to NOx. These catalysts convert hazardous NOx into naturally occurring water and nitrogen. As a side effect, CO2 can be produced by adding ammonia to urea. The efficiency of reducing NOx from nitrogen to water has reached 70%-95%. DeNOx catalysts are used in select catalytic reduction systems for boilers, engines, turbines, and water incineration, as well as power stations. This can lead to lower NOx emissions due to the catalytic converter.

DeNOx catalysts are easily segmented by manufacturing material, catalyst shape, and application. Catalysts are made from ceramics and zeolites. They also contain oxides of various bases and precious metals. Base metal catalysts are able to work in common industry temperatures of 200°C to 600°C. To be used in higher temperatures, zeolite catalysts need a higher temperature range.
