Wearable Display market

The wearable display is a new technology that is quickly gaining popularity. This type of display can be worn on the body and allows the user to interact with it using various input methods. The most common type of wearable display is the head-mounted display (HMD), which is worn on the head like a pair of glasses. Head-mounted displays have been used for many years in virtual reality (VR) and augmented reality (AR) applications. However, recent advances in technology have made them much more compact and portable, making them ideal for use in everyday life.
