Instant tea is a type of tea made from combining hot water with tea leaves. The tea leaves are then dried and ground into powder. You can make instant tea by adding the powder to hot water and making a cup in no time. Instant tea was invented in the early 1900s. It was made by boiling tea leaves in hot water and then extracting the water to make a concentrated syrup. The syrup was then dried, and then powdered so that it could easily be reconstituted with hot water. The process of making instant tea has evolved over time. Today, spray drying is used. Spraying hot water on dried tea leaves instantly results in a fine powder.
