In the fast lighting world of the 21st century, people certainly do not have the time to rush through documents and find details at their banks. With the increase of financial uncertainty in the post-covid world, there is a gap between expense management and wealth building. With Flamingo's Smart Analyst, one can track and categorize budgets considering their income and investment patterns. Flamingo is bridging the gap between expense tracking and wealth growth.

The post-covid world gave rise to buy now, pay later transactional values upto 55% in Australia. With such a shocking increase, people are either indulging in impulse purchases or are not considering reliable statistics before their purchase. Flamingo Tech experts understood the psychology of its consumers and tried to build a solution-oriented approach to help people in their times of financial crisis.

“We are here to equilibrate financial well-being. It's important that we recognize that the consumer expects more from their purchase than the simple purchase of products or services. The financial sector has existed in siloed structures, masking data from the user. We must emerge from these silos and make financial data accessible so that the user can make more informed financial decisions.” says Sana Tayyab highlighting the problems of the finance market.

One of the key features of Flamingo is its users' access to personalized financial data. While using this app, people can manage their expenses and keep track of their records. This is completely personal to the users who wish to use it as per their desire without any pressure for external assistance.
