

Alwyn Cashe, America's first black Medal of Honor Recipient since Vietnam to receive his own clothing collection

Triple Nickel Unapologetically Celebrates Diversity and Inclusion

SAN ANTONIO, TX, USA, November 8, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- San Antonio, TX: Triple Nickel, a veteran minority-owned apparel company, has partnered with the Cashe family to create a clothing collection that will help raise money to create the Alwyn Cashe Foundation in the near future. The non-profit foundation's goal is to mentor youth looking to enter civil service, but may have difficulties doing so. Initially, the collection will feature graphic art created by Triple Nickel and featured for a limited time in select Kohl's stores nationwide, and Kohls.com; just in time for Veterans Day.

The Alwyn Cashe Collection Banner

The Cashe Collection is an opportunity to amplify the legacy and heroism of Sergeant First Class (SFC) Alwyn Cashe. SFC Cashe's actions on October 17, 2005 during a security patrol near Samarra, Iraq earned him the Medal of Honor on December 16, 2021. His mounted patrol was ambushed and the vehicle he was in was targeted by an Improvised Explosive Device (IED). SFC Cashe pulled six soldiers and an interpreter to safety from the burning vehicle - all the while sustaining life threatening injuries himself. Cashe succumbed to his injuries on November 8, 2005.

It doesn't have to be to the armed services, just a path to service...I truly believe he (SFC Cashe) followed his dream when he joined the military. We just want to help people follow their dreams.”
