A building wood door, also known as the doorway or doorway, is a movable barrier that allows access to the interior of a building. Doorframes are the members that hold a door in place. They are located at the top and sides of the opening. It provides privacy and safety, as well as security. The application of the wood door will determine its design. Hardwoods like oak, poplar, and walnut are darker and have more grain. Softwoods like pine, fir, and cypress are more affordable with a less veined appearance.
